Teachers are recognizing the fact that the direct simple forms of expression, based upon a clear, definite knowledge of the subject can be acquired in the lowest grades. The use of new words should be taken up whenever the child needs them. To limit the forms of expression to set phrases circumscribes a child s mental activity and dwarfs individuality. Many children who enter school are timid, have a very limited vocabulary, and do not have the observing powers well developed. Others are very observant or inquisitive and can freely express their ideas. The intercourse of these two classes of children can be mutually helpful. Children who use wrong forms of expression should be quietly and quickly offered the correct form of language without diverting them much from the thought. The thought presented should be intense enough to hold closely the interest and attention. Language is related to every exercise and success in this work is to be measured by the power of the pupil to stand on his feet and to state his ideas clearly in simple and correct English. When the written work is given the exercises should be definite and short, and mistakes should be prevented by encouraging children to ask information when they are in doubt, so that the first written forms shall be correct in construction, spelling,...
